"The Diary of a Nose," "nose" being the English translation of the French equivalent "nez" reserved for perfumers, takes us behind the actions of composing (and not behind the scenes, as a gossipy exposé would), into the thought process of the man who by his own admission hovers between artist and craftsman, questioning all the tropes of his subject, endlessly honing his skills and furthering a dialogue with the consumer which is elevated on a much higher plane than usual. He says his ...
